Chase City, Va., August 10, 1883.
This place, once called Christianville and afterwards named for Hon. S. P. Chase, of Ohio, is substantially in the hands of immi-grants from Ohio and Pennsylvania. It is the present terminus of the Richmond and Mecklenburg railway, and is distant about twenty miles from Keysville and twe've from Clarksville. Many of them made two mistakes: They paid too much for the lands, and they estimated in pitching their crops the productive power of the lands too highly. Some were so soldy disappointed that they went back North. One man tells me that he turned over a large acreage of land covered with straw and those weeds which he was forewarned by the older inhabitants did not indicate fertile soil, using a two-horse left-turning plough with a heavy horse left-turning plough with a heav seed-corn "as they do up North," and the from the other shore, return was a big crop of fodder. August 10, 1883.

The drought in Louisa and the upper end of Hanover is distressing. Farmers are despondent, and have for some time known that no corn would be made if it did not rain in very short order. Corn on low lands is looking only tolerably well; but this will not make half a crop. Tobacco is running up, the leaves are narrow and without texture, and the recent cool nights encourage the worms in their ravages on the plant. I don't suppose one fourth of a crop of tobacco will be made.
